This conference sheet concerns the notion of conflict in the literature. Discuss what is a conflict, as well as the contours and explains the five main types of possible conflicts in the literature. Most of the different types of conflicts contain an example of real literature to further explicate the category. I used it as added to my guide to my literature (also published here) to further develop the idea of the conflict - which was only touched in the guide. It is suggested that before digging in a literary piece, both the literature guide and this conference slab to be presented. In this way, students can understand the notions that will analyze the text before they should do it. To continue enjoying our site, we ask you to confirm your identity as human. It would be boring. Maybe that's why all the stories that are worth saying have a problem. Most scholars agree that there are six fundamental types of conflicts in literature. I will define each of these. Then he will provide PowerPoint lessons and worksheets that reinforce these ideas. Use these resources to help your students to master the concept of conflict in literature. In this type of conflict, the central character clashes with another person. You don't always have a person. They could be animals for example. I imagine it is only easier to say the person instead of entity. Not all conflicts are among the characters. Jimmy and Eric compete for the same position on the baseball team. When a story has a person against the conflict of sĀ ©, the main character fights him or herself. He or she can not trust or ability. He or she may have to make a difficult choice. Or he or she may have to face a personal problem. The key here is that the battle occurs within the character, even if it can lead to and influence other characters. Alexa caught her friend of her Jamie stealing from a classmate. Now Alexa must choose between keeping her friendship with Jamie and doing the right thing. With this type of conflict, the main character challenges a law, a tradition or an institution. The main character or characters can fight against the forces representing these institutions. Vanessa makes an art project protesting the police's brutality. Her art teacher of her loves the project and tries to present it in the artistic show of the city, but the county commission refuses the project. Vanessa, his art teacher fought for freedom of expression. When a story has a person against the conflict of nature, the main character fights to endure or overcome the forces of nature. He or she can fight to survive hard elements, browse through a disaster or meet her basic needs. Stories with this type of conflict can often occur in the desert, but can also occur in urban settings. Alex and Scott are out outside On a small fishing boat when a big storm strikes. After their boat overturns and sinks during the storm, Alex and Scott struggle to return to the shore. Just when they think things can't get worse, they see a shark fin that surround them. In stories with this type of conflict, the main character resists forces that are not from this world. He or she can fight monsters or strange creatures. He or she can challenge beings with magic powers. Or he or she can meet hostile aliens. The key to this conflict is that the forces that are not from this world threaten the main character. Tara and her friends of her accept a courage to sleep in the old abandoned house on the hill. They recited brave, but when they started to see the ghosts they tried to run. Trapped in the haunted house, Tara and the friends of her struggle to escape with their lives. In a story with this type of conflict, the main character resists technological forces. He or she can fight rouge robots or hostile computers. Or he or she only can fight to accept or use the technology of a changing world.
